THE PARTING SHIP.

On erims: aed couch, the sun once m At even mg's gate lay dying; Above the and sea's sullen roar The grit ving winds were sighing; A bark sh it from the lonely shore With all her broad sails flying.

And they that salled upon that ship No more they wept nor smilled; No tearful eye, no trembling lip, No supp feations wild.

No sorrowing for the lessening lands, No dies 2 of coming til; They sto d with folded, cold white hands And he ris forever still.

On that il imitable sea The ghe stly vessel speed; Out-bearing to eternity The world's unnumbered dead.

But on the shore—so dark, so fair From which they swiftly parted. Were pleating cries and mute des Of mort als broken hearted.

And arms occeft in angulsh raised. Implors g to the skies; And silent souls that only gazed With st: adfast, hopeless eyes.

But when the great celestial pyre For each dead day is lighted, Then, leeping on the wall of fire, That bruithless ship is sighted.

White with the dead that die each day She holds her course alone. Far through the closing shadows gray Out to the dark unknown.

'Tis yesterday upon the shore; To-day will come to-morrow Here and hereafter—ever more-And so, farewell to sorrow.

And so, farewell to sorrow.

Ber gnat shadow fails, and gray
The twilight comes, appaling;

Ber cloudy sails shake out the syray,
And then-the dow is failing;
The cordage creaks, and straight we say;
Hark!—how the winds are calling!

CHAPTER XXIV.
CONCLISION.

The good may trimmph, but are never triumphant. Only the wicked exult at their own success and the overthrow of an enemy. The truly noble man or woman never delights in the downfall of another, even though he be an enemy. Trimmph and joy were all darkened by the startling intelligence that little Amos was dying and had sent to see his abster. Sie did not know, but in her little fellow's sufferings. The Lord had been good to her, and she prayed food to spare the little bother, if it was His holy will. Yet, ever through her ears the words kept ringling: "Not my will, but Tilline, be done."

Warren and Helen spoke but few words on the drive. They buth felt that it was a drive to the scene of death, and both were utering silent prayers for strength to hear up under the centing trial.

The did farm house is in sight. Reserving the long cost. She svinces no surprise at seeing her herethes and Helen.

The father meets them at the door. No word is spoken, but they are conducted as once to the chamber of face of her little dead brother. There is a smile upon his face, and Mrs. Stuart says the last words he uttered were: "Yes, muther, I come—I come!" Tears again flow down Helen's check; they were not the tears of despair, but sadness and loy.

He suffers on longer. He had gone to the world of eternal peace and youth. He was now in the arms of his mother, in that Celestial City not made with lands. with hands.

Was this death? No, though we call Was this death? No, though we call it death. A change is a far better term. Was this nn act of Providence? We poor, short-sighted mortals are not to criticise the nets of Amiginty God.

The language of Job was in Helen's whal.

The language of you was mind:

"is there not an appointed time for man upon earth? Are not his days also like the days of a hireling? As a servant earnestly desireth the shadow, and as a hireling looketh for the reward of his work." Job VII, 1st and 2d.
"If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my uppointed time will I wait till my change come." Job XIV, 14th.

wait till my change come." Job XIV, 14th.
Yes, little Amos, did live again. His change had come, and her heart told her it was better for him.
Helen felt lonely; though kind words were spaken to her. There are always so many things to suggest the presence of the departed, long after they have left us. We seem to hear their voices in the halls, and each garment suggests their presence.
Often in the night, Helen seemed to hear the painful cough which had long afflicted her brother. She would start up from her shunbers, so real did the vision seem, and it wend be some minutes before she could convince herself that little Amos was not alive and in the flesh once more to suffer.
Again and again did she in dreams live over the scenes and trials with that little brother whom she loved dearer than life.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Stonet did all they.

that little brather whom she loved dearer than life.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Stunrt did all they could to conside poor Helen. Brother Blaze, the minister, came.

Oh, what a world of consedation is a good pastor in the hour of sorrow and death. Who can speak such words of comfort as the man of God?

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them net, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," he said to the falr mearmer.

Mrs. Arnud and her husband sent regrets and werds of comfort to Helen, but deemed it best not to attend the funeral. Pete, the peddler, eme, and offered the best of his stock for burial clothes. Rose Stuart was Helen's dearret comforter, not even excepting Warren, who found himself placed in such a strange position that he could offer but little consedation. The only satisfaction Clarence had, was that he had thrashed Bill Jones, "the destroyer of that child's He,"

The funeral was set for an early day.
Rev. Blaze took for his text "The Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away;
blessed be the name of the Lord."

The sermon was not noted for cloquence or rhetoric, but it was full of hope and cheer. He did not, as man ministers do, preach all "round the subject, but right at it. He said the body lying before them was only the casky which had contained little Amos, but that be had left this frail tenement of clay, and was now with his parents in the eternal home where might never comes. There was no cause for weeping, it was the change of which Job spake. That which was our loss was his eternal gain, and yet as seiths mortals we could not but shed tears and

When the sermon (which was preached in the school-house) was over, the pail-bearers, six bright little boys, carried the cofin out, and it was placed in the hearse. Then a long string of vehicles, persons on horseback and on foot followed it to the neighborhood burying-ground, where the father and mother of the child were buried. There he was laid away by their side to rest till the resurrection morn.

Fruit-raisers often refer to the fact that some haskets of peaches will readily sell for $2, while others are difficult to dispose of for 50 cents; that choice spring lamb is often sold in our large cities for 50 cents per pound is certain. Extra line chickens ready for the bridling-iron by the 1st of July have also been sold for 75 cents per pound. The late Dr. Hull, of Alton, sold Washington plums in this market for $1$ per dozen. He sold some pears and apricots at the same price. Black Hamburg grapes have been sold at $1 a pound during the same season that Concords found a slow sale at one twentieth of that sum.

We are not justified, however, in drawing the conclusion that by raising the quality of all the articles produced on farms such prices could be realized for them. There are rich epicures that will may almost any price for vegetables produced far in advance of the season, for fruits of large size and surpassing excellence, for meats that will "melt in the month," for cream cheese and for fresh butter made in winter from the milk of Jersey cows. What One Man First Contributed to the Man Servery person who as spent most of his life in any industrial pursuit has learned much that Is now and the servery one who has acquired much that Is now and sequired much useful information is able and willing to impart the knowledge he has goined to others. Such, however, is not the case with Robert Douglas, the great unrecyman and Fue-planter. At the recent convention of nurserymen in this slit, he told how he became interested in forestry, and what progress he had made in it. When he came to the West he learned from the "old settlers" that tame grass and trees would not grow on the pairies. He read most of the Eastern works of forestry and learned from them that forest trees would do will if planted on land that was covered with soil, and that conferous seedlings could do best started in openings in a natural forest. Heset out trees on the pealife that had never been broken and had poor success with them. He subdued the soil and found that they grew like weeds, though it was necessary to keep the weeds in subjection. He then ascertained that seedlings ould be raised better in a nursery than in openings made among forest trees.

Numerous experiments convinced

subjections and the raised better in a nursery than in openings made among forest trees.

Ximerous experiments convinced him that native trees are generally nuch preferable to those obtained in foreign countries. They are better adapted to our soil and climate. We can see what they will do by observing them in natural woods. Not only are native trees best, but experience shows that it is advisable to plant the seeds of trees that grow in the vicinity of one's own home. The black walnut grows wild from the great lakes to the Guilf of Mexico, but ants obtained in the South are not likely to produce hardy trees in the North. The southern nuts may all germinate and produce small trees that appear to be very promising, but the chances are that they will be killed down to the ground the tirst cold winer. Black walnut trees raised from Northern seed are of slow growth, but quite certain to be lardy. The like is true of red cedar trees, that grow in almost every state and tervitory. Most kinds of trees, like [adlans, can acquire peculiar characteristics by being grows for years In one part of the country. Removed to a place where climate and soil are different they do not do well.

Mr. Dosglas has ascertained that the methods practiced by European for soil are different they do not do well.

Mr. Douglan has ascertained that the methods practiced by European foresters in raising seedlings, in transplanting them, are quite too costly for this country, where labor is high. They, spade and trench the land intended for seed beds, dig the trees with spades,
and cultivate them with hand-hoes.
Then the work is almost all done with horses and the implements they draw.
The seedlings are raised on mellow soil that is free from weeds, and are taken up with a tree-digger drawn by horses. The raw prairie is prepared for setting out trees as it is for raising a crop of corn. It is broken shallow in the summer, and the coming fall the soil in the firmwas is invested and the plow run deep enough to throw some three inches of earth over it. Before planting the harrow and roller are used on it, and the market used to lay off the rows to run his both directions, the same as for a crop of corn. New land is in many respects preferable to old. Its fertility has not been exhausted, and it contains no weed seeds unless they are seatthered to the wind.

Small trees can be set on land prepared as for planting corn very rapidly. A spade will remove earth enough to make a hole that will contain the roots. When the roots have been placed in position the spadeful of soil can be thrown over them and prespect of the presence of the planter. Two men can work on adjoining rows and a smart boy can keep them supplied with trees to set out and place them in the forest hat are dug. Two men and a boy can plant 4,560 trees in a day if the ground is well prepared and narked off. Care and skill in planting come from practice. The best work is done by an ordinary two-horse walking cultivation required will depend on the varieties of trees planted. Some make alow and thoreas a rapid growth. The cultivation required will depend on the

VALUE OF ADVERTISING

VALUE OF ADVERTISING.

The Most Reliable Way of Achieving Success in Business.

Since the invention of printing with types, which dates back further than the days of Gittenberg, there has been no time when the advantages of advertising were more fully understood and appreciated than at present. The benefits derived from a judicious use of printer's lak have been so obvious that it has come to be a recognized axiom among business men that the more liberally it is used, the greater becomes the chances of winning success. Of course there are isolated cases, in which men who have won prosperity without its aid will scout at the idea of its proving a valuable auxiliary to without its aid will scout at the idea of its proving a valuable auxiliary to others. It will be found on inspection, however, that these fossils, for your true opponent of advertising is necessarily an antiquated man, thoroughly incrusted with prejudices, have sueceeded by pure luck, and not through the exercise of any special talents possessed by them. On the other hand, how numerons are the instances in which men of sense, added by the publicity afforded by newspaper advertising, have been conabled to reverse the railings of fate, which would have, had they quietly nequiseed, relegated them to the obscurity of failure.

The history of the successful business men of this country is so proguant with tributes to advertising that the first attempt to give a collection of biographical sketches of those who had won fame and fortune in the ranks of trade was made by a firm devoted entirely to the profession of securing advertisements and having the same published. It is a singular fact that this series of biographics embrace the names of nearly all the prominent men who have numssed wealth as merchants, manufacturers or professionals; and undoubted evidences are presented with each sketch that no small part of their good fortune was owing to their shrewdness in attracting public atteution to their business, through the medium of the press. Such striking instances of success as are reheased in the volume referred to could not do otherwise than carry conviction to all minds ready to receive sensible impressions; and therefore we are alforded the spectacle of all classes eagerly striving to gain the greatest possible publicity, not always, however, at the greatest possible cost. Indeed, the opposite is sometimes the case. The newly-fledged advertiser often devotes his attention to circumventing the business office of a newspaper. But the regular, legitimate and persistent advertiser learns and appreciates the value of success and character.—Boston Budget.

CHINESE BOOK-KEEPING

CHINESE BOOK-KEEPING.

What a St. Louis Merchant Saw In a Celestial's Counting Room.

The Chinese book-keeper is a curiosity, as he flourishes on the western coast and around Portland, Ore. I was up around there recently, and with the idea of bringing home some Chinese enriosities, visited several stores and shops. Some of the biggest merchants in that country, you know, are Chinese. I went into one small place where a lot of books were spread out on a long counter, behind which was a Chinaman, while behind a sort of a desk at the other end was another wearer of the pigtail. The books looked to me like almanes, if the Chinese have such things, and, walking up to the counter, I turned two or three of them over, looking at them to satisfy myself as to what they were, though, of course, I couldn't have told if I had looked a year. The lik was still wet, as if a hen with luked feet had been walking back and forth over them. This gave me the idea that I had strayed into a manufactory of Chinese almanace, and noticing the yellow-hued gentleman behind the counter looking at time I carelessly inquired: "How muches, John?" He peat-ed; "want to buyee. This time John's features changed. Hie actually smiled as he ieplied: "Me no selle these bookee; me keeper of looks for that entire business portlon of the city, but if he wasn't he had books enough to have keeper also that is you the man's set of books. I don't know whether he was the keeper of looks for that entire business portlon of the city, but if he wasn't he had books county to have keeper also that is you the sam's set of books. I don't know whether he was the keeper of looks for that entire business portlon of the city, but if he wasn't he had books enough to have keep the looks the whether he was the keeper of looks for that entire business portlon of the city, but if he wasn't he had books encounts. CONVINCING TESTIMONY.

Refect of Ateshel Upon Human Healthsureng Drink.

As to the effect of alcohol upon human health and vigor, so fearful is the need not to repeat much of it. Perhaps the most convincing recent evidence is that of the returns of vital statistics of

At the same standard, the mortality figure for clergymen shows the contrast of 565; for gardness, 569; for farmers, 531, and for agricultural laborers, 701.

In addition, the statisticians say that the excessive mortality in many other callings, as thut of cubmen, etc., is one to be accounted for by the use of alcoholic liquids, although this is not stated as the exists. Here are some of the statistical comments:

"Commercial travelers, who lead mostly an out-of-over criticine, have a mortality of 564, taility ladue to this cause is sparned when it is noted hist, under the hesdings Alcoholism, Laver Diesea, cout, Suickle, the mortality figure that the country of the contrast of the habitual mostly to be charged to the habitual statistical record points to an excess of diseases in which, in the opinion of the statisticians, the high proportion is mostly to be charged to the habitual use of alcohol, and often by those who were not regarded as intemperate. In different persons different organs seem to feel the severity of the disturbance, but all are more or less weak-need. Autorities may differ in their estimate of causes which have produced embarassing and finally fatal changes in various secreting and exceeding organisms, but we believe no one has yet been found to dispute the unrivaled capacity of alcohol to produce irritative and degenerative changes in the minute capillary circulation on which the integrity and ability of the vital organs depend. This does not absolutely retire it from use in the hands of the shilled physician in emergencies of disease, any more than it does optum, belialona, or corrosive sublimate; but it does certify that alcohol is the most riskful of drinks, in all that relates to the circulation of the blood in those organs whose vitality and function depend on the perfectuess of their capillary circulation. It is essentially a disturier of the rhythm and the function of the blood-flow—N. Y. Independent.

THE MAN WHO DRINKS.

THE MAN WHO DRINKS.

A Hanki That Can Not Be Hinden—White Ty Drinking Not a Sign of Brilliance, but in Marking Min a Sign of Brilliance, but a Mark of Mental Weakness.

Of drunkenness as a moral and physical orime nothing new can be said, but some of the phenomena of a psycological and accial nature have received but slight attention from professional advocates of temperance. One of these is the delusion cherished by the young man who is just entering upon a downward career that no one among his respectable acquaintances is aware of his indulgence in intoxicants. Regardless of the fact that he himself can instantly detect the signs of such weakness in others, and can not be deceived, he goes on his way feeling such that he effectually conceals all traces of his own intemperance from those whom he would prefer to keep in ignorance. The aged and experienced toper realizes that concealment of this sort is impossible, and frankly acknowledges his condition, while the younger brother flatters himself, even his sober moments, that his secret is safe.

Another peculiarity, or, perhaps, it younger brother flatters himself, even in his sober moments, that his secret is safe.

Another peculiarity, or, perhaps, it should be called another phase of the first, is the drinker's failure to comprehend that he makes a nuisance of himself when he indicts his society apon decent people. In the drunkard of long standing a disregard of the feeling and comfort of others is the natural result of the selfsiances inevitably engentered by whisky; but in the least area of the selfsiance in the least and hopeless sinner a certain pride and self-respect exists and unigers long, and the gentlemanity disposition to be agreeable manifests the self in every particular but this. Knowing how unfit for companionship are other men who have been drinking "moderately"—they all drink moderately—they all to detect the man who is addicted even to an occasional glass as a "necessary stimulant." If there were no other betrayal of the indulgence the funes of his breath is quite sufficient, a very small portion of alcoholic liquor being enough to render the partaker obnoxious to those of fastidious taste. As to the "moderate drinker," his breath is like that of a pestilence and he is literally a siench to the nostrils. This statement is one that he may not relish; but faste are facts, and it is sometimes well to put them in plain language.

ish; but facts are facts, and it is sometimes well to put them in piain language.

There are other signs, however, equally impossible to dugguise, and the chief among them is the absolute inability of the drinker to refrain from making a fool of himself. He may not be so far under the influence of his favorite beverage as to be what is commonly called "drunk," but under very moderate degree of "stimulation" he departs from the usual tenor of his way to be witty or wise, and calls attention to himself by his disman failure to accomplish his aim.

In addition to the knowledge that his presence among refined people is not desirable for the reasons named, the young man who "takes a drink when he feels like it," should be made to understand that he is regarded not with the toleration and maudlin pity that once followed such "good feliuws," but with a contempt that has few modifications. The drinking of brilliancy, but, is held, rather, to be a mark of mental weakness; the drunkard is no longer an erratie genins, but a disgusting creature, even in the early stages of his course, and the more distinctly be realizes this, truth the better.—Indianapolis Journal.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

The new license law in Minnesota wiped out five hundred saloons, or about twenty per cent.

Temperance people circulated handbills in England, during the Queen's jubiles celebration, saying: "Remember, if you drink the Queen's health you damage your own."

JUDGES are weary with calling attention to drink as the principal cause of crime, but I can not refrain from asying that if they could make England sober they would shut up nine-tents of the prisons—Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, of England.

At a recent meeting of the Middleses is South (Congregational) Conference a resolution was adopted declaring it to be the situty of every church of Christ not only to lasist rigidly moun the practice of total abstinence of its members, but also to make epecial efforts for the suppression of intemperance is the community at large, and do this as a part of the regular church were.

Mrs. John Ward, of the Cox Mill neighborhood, brought us a messof sweet potatoes hat Monday which excel anything of the kind we have seen this year. She did not know the variety, but thought thee were of the Southern Hardward of fine flavor. Mrs. Ward is ahuge and of fine flavor. Mrs. Ward is un excellent lady, and belongs to a family we have always held in high esteem, her father, Unele Billy Cox 83, and her unele, Dr. Ben. Cox, of Monnt Sterling, being among those we think especially well of. Her liege lord, John Ward, is a good friend, also, but anyone meguainted with him will not accuse him of raising polatoces. He would rather of raising potatoes. He would rather prospect for silver and gold.

John Pieratt says that while in Louis-ville, he and Geo. Rice visited a fencing school. Rice looked at the fencing mas-ter's maneuvers for a while and then ask-ch him if they could engage in a fencing bout, the f. m. replied that they could. Kice seized one of the folis, and in a lit-tic while demonstrated that he lad not for-gotten the lessons taught him in early childhood in his native France, and that through the practice he gained it the Fran-co-Prussian war he was an expert. He parried every blow of the fancing mas-ter and at one time sent his adversarie's foil high in air, spationed him a hundred school, but likes said he preferred to come-home and live with Georgy and build picket fence.

MISS PERSIS.

The Pathetic Story of Herself and Her Doll.

Lithink sho always must have been called "Miss" Persis, even when she was a child. Perhaps she had not ulways worn ber hind: and the she was a child. Perhaps she had not ulways worn ber hind and missing the she was a child. Perhaps she had not ulways worn ber hind and missing the she was a child. Perhaps she had not ulways worn ber hind and she was a child. Perhaps she ind not always dressed in a black gown, with stiff, sharp fobls, or had heeditess gaiters on her large, bony feet; but I don't think Miss Persis could have ever been a real child. The house she lived in was a good deal like Miss Persis, only it was very small. Still, it seemed to be trying to live up to her pattern as well as it could. It stood lengthwise with the road. It had adoor in the middle that led into a thuy square half from which opened on one side the darkened and unused country parlor, mid on the other the living-room, only in Miss Persis. Persis had not a december the living-room, only in Miss Persis, home-like air of the usual family living-room, but kept a general likeness to the parlor. The kitchen was in an La the back of the house, and up-stairs there were probably two bedrooms, but Is doubt if any one ever went up-stairs at Miss Persis had not always been alone; her mother had lived with her—but Mrs. Hotblack; but I never heard of him, and it was quite impossible to imagine him. Mrs. Hotblack and her shughter were both "members of the church," and of course the minister's wife and the wives of the deacens went to call on them at regular intervals. I think, however, it was always regarded by the church nembers as a sort of reagins duty. No one ever thought of "dropping in" to see them, or of "healing neighborly." After Miss. Hotblack died all the neighbors balled, as neighbors ought to. And Mrs. Deacen Asher said she had never felt so awkward in her life. She couldn't think of a thing to say, and she felt all the wines of the church nembers as a sort of reaging medial would be put of until next week of the found of the walk were lersis had taken them down and was brushing off the mat-that I had stood on. Poor Miss Persis! It wasn't her fault that she looked so grim and sustere; and no one ever suspected how the lonely woman longed for sympathy and the power to express her own histories in others. Sie could drop her dollar into the plate every missionary Sunday—a dollar saved by much economy from her seanty income—but as to giving help and personal kindness to the poor people around her, that she could not do. There never was a more regular attendant at the sewing society than Miss Persis; and she did more than any two of the ladies, as she sat silently sewing while the rest worked and talked the while about Mr. Peters; new house, or a new kind of crochet, or a particularly toothsome receipt for nut-cake, or on any of the numerous topies of a village sewing society. The poor Western missionary may have found cause to bless the labors of Miss Persis; but the poor about the town knew her charities only as they came in the general church collection or in cast-off graments sent by the minister's wife.

There was poor Mrs. Turner, who cast-off garments sent by the minis-ter's wife.

There was poor Mrs. Turner, who was Miss Persis' nearest neighbor, and who was left a widow with eight little children to bring up. Miss Persis wished that she could do some-thing for her; she thought it would be a "real treat" to sew for those children—but she never dared to offer to. She wouldn't have known what to say.

"I didn't care about most things to play with, but I did always so want a doll. I didn't go 'round with other children much. I never made friends easy, and somehow I always fult different. I'd have liked to have played with them, but I never seemed to know how, and they never seemed to know how, and they never seemed to care to have me. I used to be dreadful lonesome, and I didn't even make a rap baby—though is for some I might have but I always felt that mother would think I was foolish If I should go lugging around a doll. Sometimes I used to have a croak-necked squash, but I didn't like to take one and hide it, and I knew, if I didn't, that by and by it would be cut up and cooked; and this need to swarp me all the time I played with it, so I couldn't get and to firm Miss Persis, for it was beginning to have a new interest for me. "Where did yon get this one?" I said.

"Well, I had to make believe I had."

I couldn't go to sheep, and so, finally, I laid her on the bed beside me, where I could reach out and take hold of her when the pain was so awful bad. After that I wasto take her out quite often, for there was nobody to come in unexpected, and I could always put her away if the bell rang. "I made her a few things, because she took so little eloth that the pieces couldn't be need for much else.

"I really used to hurry home from placess on so to get back to her; and before I had even taken my things off I'd take her up, and see how glod slee was to have me back. I felt a real fellow-feeling with Mrs. Turner when I leard her talking about her children—saying what a comfort they were to her, even if they were a bother. I knew how it cheered you up to have some one to do for and to think of. "I have had her a goog long time now, and it don't seem as if I could get along without her. I don't know what I'd do if any thing happened to learn." She took Amanda Malvina back into receive and howled at her with the received. seemed to smile.

She took Annanda Malvina back into her arms, and looked at her with the look I have sometimes seen in a mother's eyes.

One thing has troubled me a good deal, and that is what will become of her when I, die. People would wonder at finding her omong my things, and like as not they would give her to some child who'd he careless with her; and, any way I can't bear to think of her going to some one who wouldn't know just what she was to me. And now, as you understand all about it, I want to know, if, when I die, you will come here, and get her, and keep her yourself. I always have her in my upper drawer, and all other things are with her, so you won't have any trouble inding her. If you'll promise that, I shall be a sight easier. WIDOWS' DRESSES.

WIDOWS' DRESSES.

WIDOWS DRESSES.

The Most Dogular Malerials lised for Costumes of Title Description.

Entire dresses of English erape over silk linings are made for widows. The skirt is made to hung plain in front and on the sides, or else it is laid in four or five wide panel-like box plaits. The only drapery is In the back, and this is in full long plaits falling over at the top in burnoses folds. The basque is of the crape placed quite plait over a silk linung, except in front, where it laps in sumplier folds, or else there is a tichn of folds made separately, to wear or leave off, as is preferred. A full straight dress of tine soft wool bordered with crape and entirely without drapery is now made for the first dress worn by a widow. In midsummer this is of expeline or of nune' vailing; in winter it is of Henrletts cloth or of imperial serge. The waist is round, very high at the throat, with tight coat sleeves, and may be covered with crape, or else have revers or a plastron of crape. A white organdy collar and wide cuffs are worn with this waist. The skirt is full, and is shirred to the belt; the crape fold at the foot is from ten to fifteen inches deep. Good Nea and Women Who, "Baving Nothing, Net Have All."

In one of the great cities of the West which have sprung up into full life in as many years as men take to totter through bahyhood, an old gray house preaches the unusual lesson of content to all passers-by. The street on which it stands is tilled with solid rows of massive banks und lunporting houses, the most valuable property in the city. Nichod in between two towcring, splendid buildings are two acress of ground, planted in grass, and an old-fashioned garden, with a cowhouse and a plain little dwelling, such as might be built for a few hundred dollars. It is the property of a poor man, who lives on a moderate salary earned by his daily labor. A few years ago he bought three acres of this ground for six dollars, and afterwards sold enough to build a home for himself and his wife upon the rest of the lot. He has been offered half a million for it, and refused.

"I have no children," was his answer. "I have all I want—a comfortable home, easy work, enough for our city." I have the wish to be intented to the subons or the wish to be intented to the subons or fetter of the tot of the refuse.

sole ionic, easy work, chough for our daily need. I do not wish to be rich."
Whatever we may think of his reasons, or the wishoun or folly of his course, there can be no doubt that he has acquired something beyond all lewels in value—content. If an lionest man be the noblest work God, a contented man is searredly the tarest. There is an old story of a quizzleal Irish nobleman, who put up a placard on a field: "This meadow shall be given to the man who can prove that he is absolutely satisfied with his lot." But as soon as the applicant had proved his content with his fortune, the joker saked limi: "Then what do you want in a crue if the the content of the man and women are those who are too much excupted with work for others to restlect upon their own wants or to child their belle wow a multitions. ### THE OMINOUS OPAL.

A Jower's Raisenan's Chra About This Much-Abused Gen.

The opal has come into fashion again so suddenly that its value has increased treenty-live per cent, within the past year. Although the pretitest combination in jewelry is the opal surrounded with diamonds, there was such a prejudice against the opal that it had almost gone out of use previous to the recent revival. It began to go out of fashion about fifteen years ago, and there are sensible women, who are not superstitions, but who frankly admit that had almost gone out of fashion about fifteen years ago, and there are sensible women, who are not superstitions, but who frankly admit that they have a prejudice and save one of the pretitest jewels from obscurity. The opal is the jewel of October, so that, according to popular superstition, those born in that month are safe in wearing it. I have heard many incidents of opals, which no doubt were causes for the loss of popularity, and the ascribing of bad linek by the wearers has no doubt deterned others from purchasing such ill-omeus. There is a lady in the city who has full set of opals and diamonds, ear-rings, breast-pin, bracelets, rings and har-pins, that is not equaled by any other set in the West. She was once prosperous and lived in wealth, but in the last five years has had more misfortunes than usually befall one woman. Divorce, loss of fortune, followed quickly upon-the other. She never wears her opulanow, and it has been frequently remarkable. It know an other lady who ascribes misfortune to a beautiful opal ring which she keeps because of the analysis of the she were the cause of her ill-luck. ### HAPPINESS OF FLIGHT.

The Pare Enjoyment Which Birds Take in Their Aerial Eccursions. May we and infor that all animals whose muscular development is greater in proportion to their bulk than that of man should derive from its exercise agreater intensity of pleasure, greater absolutely in proportion to the utainments and less interfered with by the greater muscular ease with while they are accomplished. If this is so the majority of the mammalla and almost all birds should in their powers of speedy movements on earth or lofty flight in the air possess resources of mental pleasure intense beyond ours and less subject to be dimmed by the pain of overstrained muscles. The power of flight is without doubt associated with pleasures which we can not directly gauge or estimate, but of the value of which our desires can give us some idea. That birds distinctly enjoy the exercise of their powers there can be no manner of doubt. Having once acquired the power of flight or inherited it from their sampsishan ancestor, they have developed it far beyond all the requirements of their in dividual or specific life. If it were not pleasurable, then flight would be discontinued when it was no longer necessary. But, as a fact, bird life presents innumerable instances of the maintenance of the powers of flight in species to whose existence it is by no means essentual. The skylark does not confrom mercenary motives; pigeons, domesticatel for generations, fly about all day long, though they need to seek neither food nor shelter. It is not necessary to watch birds on the wing for very long to convince one's self that the act of flight is one of pure enjoyment, that it is cultivated and adorned with the refinements which character-face an "accounglishment." Such is the evolution of the tumbler pigeon, such the more refined and masterly hovering of some hirds who possess the power of so balancing themselves on a slanting breeze as to remain motionless with respect to the earth, without apparently moving a wing or a feather, floating all the time, still and ca

The Moon and the Weather.

During a long storm, persons who are well versed in weather lore are often heard to console themselves with the predictment that there will be a change of weather when the moon changes. Nasinveth and Crypenter characterize as a popular error, in its most absurd form, this belief that the gradual turning of the moon's face toward and away from the san could, at certain points, upset the existing condition of our atmosphere. In England (and the same may be said of America) the weather changes about every three days, and there is a change of the moon every seven days, so that many coincidences must occur. Those who believe that "the moon rules the weather "days credit such coincidences to lurar influences. But the theory is untreable unless it applies to every case, thereil by the same chees to a change that a change of the moon will turn dry weater to wet or wet to dry indiscriminately is the merest childshees, and contrary to all meteorological records.
